To Whom It May Concern,

The idea of making the construction permitting and inspection process not a mandatory part of building is a horrible idea. I am professional engineer who has been involved with all aspects of construction from design, construction and even review or engineer failures. People lives are at stack. If people can do as they want and cut corners in their electrical systems and structures systems people could die. This irresponsible idea is to save someone a few dollars and maybe some time. The trade off of putting peoples lives in jeopardy is a horrible idea.

In review of some of the comments is seams as though an update to the current codes maybe in order to prevent future structural failures. I would be in support of updating the codes to strengthen and adding additional regulations as required so people are safe.

Sincerely,
