

POLICEMAN'S HELMET

BOTANICAL NAME: Impatiens glandulifera

WHAT DOES IT LOOK LIKE? This annual plant can grow 3 to 8 feet tall with hollow upright stems that have a reddish or purple tinge. The root system is small and shallow. The 6 inch long leaves are oblong with serrated edges. The flowers, which resemble an English policeman's helmet, can be white to all shades of pink and purple. This plant is also known as Himalayan Balsam. The State of Idaho listed this plant on their noxious weed list in 2007.

WHERE DOES IT LIKE TO GROW? Policeman's Helmet likes to grow in sun or partial shade and is tolerant of many soil types. This plant requires high moisture content in the soil, but not necessarily standing water. You can find this plant growing in lowland, riparian areas which include wetlands, moist forests, in roadside thickets and stream and river edges. Policeman's Helmet is often found in home flower gardens.

WHEN DOES IT BLOOM? The orchid-like flowers begin appearing in mid-June and will continue blooming through October.

HOW DOES THIS PLANT SPREAD? Seed production begins in late summer through fall until the first frost. A single plant can produce from 800 to 2500 seeds which are large and black. The seeds can be dispersed from mature capsules at the slightest touch, exploding the seeds as far as 20 feet from the plant. The seeds will overwinter then germinate in the spring when conditions are favorable. This plant has been spread by gardeners giving starts to others.

HOW DO I CONTROL IT?

Policeman's Helmet is on Idaho's EDRR list, which is the highest priority of State noxious weeds. If you find it please report it to Kootenai County Noxious Weed Control as soon as possible so we can positively identify it, map its location, and help you eradicate it.
